The Governance Series_Wave 2(2025)

Overview

Identification	GHA-GSS-GOV-2025-v02
Version	2

Abstract

Ghana's governance story is shaped by how people encounter public institutions every day. It shows up in the quality of services citizens receive, the fairness of administrative processes, and the degree to which people feel they are heard. The Governance Series was created to measure these experiences clearly and consistently, using evidence rather than impressions to guide national conversation and reform.

Wave 2 of the Series, with a reference period of January to June 2025, deepens this understanding. The value of this second wave is simple: it shows what has changed, what remains stubborn, and where reforms must focus if Ghana is to build stronger, fairer, and more responsive institutions. The results tell an important story of progress, persistent gaps, and opportunities for action. The reference period for Wave 1 was January to December 2024.

A few findings stand out.

First, more Ghanaians are using public services. The share of respondents who contacted public officials increased from 55.7% in Wave 1 to 74.2% in Wave 2. Contact with officials rose sharply across all regions, sex, education levels, and age groups. This expansion creates opportunities for improved service delivery, but it also exposes weaknesses when systems depend too heavily on discretion or personal networks.

Second, bribery is declining even as contact increases. The share of adults who gave money or gifts to an official fell from 18.4 percent in Wave 1 to 14.3 percent. High-value payments dropped even more steeply. This is good progress. But the data also shows a shift: officials are demanding less, yet voluntary "appreciation payments" have nearly doubled. Citizens appear increasingly convinced that paying something helps services move faster. That normalisation of informal exchange is a warning signal that cannot be ignored.

Third, refusal to pay additional money has fallen sharply. Only 3 percent of citizens who received a request declined to comply, down from 8.5 percent. Reporting incidents has also dropped. These patterns point to a critical governance barrier: citizens often feel that refusing or reporting will not lead to fair service, and may even expose them to risk.

Fourth, perceptions of voice and influence, what this report measures as inclusiveness and responsiveness, have improved across all demographic groups. The share of Ghanaians who believe the political system allows ordinary people to have a say rose from 54.8 to 68.4 percent. Those who feel completely excluded fell significantly. Yet inequalities persist. Women, young people, persons with difficulties, and the unemployed still feel less included in decision-making, even with the overall gains. Finally, citizens' expectations for the next six months are clear and consistent. Ghanaians want two things above all: better infrastructure and stronger public services, followed by economic stability, jobs, and support for businesses. These expectations align with broader governance concerns and reflect the everyday realities households face.

Unit of Analysis	The sampled population consisted of adults aged 18 years and older

Sampling

Sampling Procedure

The sampling frame was derived from the 2021 Population and Housing Census (PHC). A pre-screened database of phone numbers was used to ensure a nationally representative sample of 15,400 household phone numbers with random selection methods applied. Respondents were screened for eligibility based on the criteria of being 18 years or older and residing in Ghana at the time of the survey.

Data collection was conducted using CATI, a method chosen for its cost-effectiveness, efficiency, and ability to reach respondents across diverse locations. Standardized questionnaires, administered in multiple local languages such as Akan, Ga/Dangme, Ewe, Dagbani, etc. ensured inclusivity and accessibility. Interviewers were recruited based on the languages spoken by respondents and assigned to interview respondents in their preferred languages. Where interviewers could not speak the language of respondents, such cases were re-assigned to other interviewers who spoke those languages. Interviewers used tablets preloaded with the survey instruments, and respondents were assured of confidentiality, informed about the purpose of the survey, and given the option to withdraw at any time they wanted to. Messages on the survey were sent ahead to all respondents a week prior to the start of the survey to pre-inform them.
